2024 Refrigerant Phasedown Guide

Starting in 2024, R-410A production will be reduced to 60% of its historical baseline. Here's what you need to know to keep your HVAC systems up and running, and to navigate the changes.

R-410A Phasedown Timeline*

What You Can Do Now: Prepare Your Property

- Prices of R-410A are expected to rise due to limited availability, and purchasing now can help you avoid spending more in the future.
- As prices of R-410A increase, it's important to keep full tanks stored securely, as they can be a target for theft.
- Reclaiming R-410A from old equipment to reuse in new equipment can help mitigate future costs.

What You Can Do Moving Forward:

- Manufacturers are working to transition away from equipment that utilizes R-410A.
- The refrigerants that will replace R-410A will require enhanced safety protocols, updated equipment, and new installation procedures. HD Supply can help guide you through these changes with everything from education to installation.

Eighth And Ninth Edition Alarms Feature Improved Sensing Technology

Today's construction materials burn faster, decreasing the average escape time to just 3 minutes.* To give people more time to respond, the latest UL performance standards call for smoke detectors to have advanced sensing technology. Eighth and ninth edition alarms are designed to be more accurate and to reduce the frequency of nuisance alarms.†
